BARTON LYNCH

Barton Lynch is one of the most respected figures in professional surfing, known for his strong work ethic, strategic mind, and deep passion for riding waves. Emerging from the famous breaks of Manly in Sydney's Northern Beaches, he became a dominant competitive surfer throughout the 1980s and 1990s. His greatest achievement came in 1988 when he won the ASP World Championship, proving his consistency, intelligence, and ability to read the ocean like few others.

After retiring from competition, Barton has remained deeply involved in the surf world and serves as a commentator for the ISA, WSL and the Tokyo and Paris Olympic Games, earning him the title of surfing's most insightful voice.

As a coach and mentor, Barton has worked with surfers of all levels — from beginners to world champions and even the Goat himself Kelly Slater. He has represented his country both as a surfer and a coach, remaining active in the sport for over 45 years.

He also founded a youth development event that has grown and expanded globally into the Blast Off Video Challenge, the world's largest online event for groms, celebrating its 20th anniversary this year.

Dividing his time between Hawaii and worldwide surf trips, Barton continues to inspire the surfing community through his podcast "The Stoked Bloke Show" and his lifelong dedication to the ocean.
